Anthropology Graduate Program Learning Outcomes

- Expertise in the key current debates in Anthropology and ability to relate their research to these debates.
- An understanding of the depth of anthropological research in a particular geographic region.
- Mastery of the research methods appropriate to their field of research. This includes the ability to translate a scholarly question into on-the-ground research and using data gathered through this process to refine and elaborate this research question.
- The ability to carry out research that takes into consideration relations of power, as well as the ethical guidelines set by the American Anthropological Association.
- Acquisition of the writing skills necessary to convey effective scholarly arguments in Anthropology.
- Expertise in conveying anthropological thought/ modes of analyses to undergraduate students.
- Consideration of the potential role of anthropology in relation to diverse publics inside and outside of the academy.