

Those who nominated him say:

“His combination of compassion, knowledge and genuine love of teaching make him someone that students know always has their best interests at heart. To him, everything is a learning opportunity. He tries to teach his students life skills along with academic knowledge. For example, he designs his assignments as a way of training students for the kind of work they will be doing in a given field. He truly prepares his students for the next phase of their lives. We leave with the knowledge that whatever we do, we should do something we love and feel passionate about, and in this way we will make our world a better place.”

“Even in a class of 50 students, he knows everyone’s name after the first week. I felt motivated to work harder in his classes than in any others.”

“He’s really pushed me to do my best. He shows this kind of attention to every student he has.”