

Those who nominated him this year say:

His commitment and passion for teaching is made apparent through both his unwavering enthusiasm in the classroom, and his mentorship of students outside of the classroom.

Professor Wallace is a teacher who motivates me to work hard because I know he is invested in my success.

Professor Wallace understands the significance of historicizing and contextualizing enduring social inequalities and instills in his students a sense of social responsibility toward the common good. He teaches with great passion and soul. He is an extraordinary example of the type of person you want to encounter as a young leader, advocate, and student of social justice when you go away to college.

In a class about education, I may have learned the most about teaching from the way he modeled it for us.
