“And Still The Youth Are Coming”: Generational Politics and Anti-colonialism in Ghana

Emmanuel Asiedu-Acquah

Please join us as Emmanuel Asiedu-Acquah, PhD candidate in History at Harvard University and Adjunct Professor in African and Afro-American Studies at Brandeis University, examines youth and popular politics in 20th-century Ghana. Professor Asiedu-Acquah’s research investigates (sub)-culture(s) of youth, especially in the domains of youth associations, student politics and popular culture. His work aims to correct elite-centered accounts of the major political developments in the history of Ghana and also contributes to the renewed and growing focus on generational politics and youth in scholarship on Africa.

Thursday, March 27, 2014
Noon – 1 pm
Alumni Lounge, Usdan Student Center
Brandeis University

Lunch will be served
Please contact delandej@brandeis.edu to RSVP

Cosponsored by the Office of the Dean of Arts and Sciences and The Class of 1961 Annual Lecture Endowment Fund