INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS SCHOOL

Adjunct Faculty Pool

The Brandeis International Business School invites applications for its adjunct faculty pool that serves both the graduate school and the undergraduate Business program. Individuals in the pool are asked to teach courses on a part-time basis, usually in the evenings. Main areas of teaching involve business, economics and finance.

Adjunct faculty members are typically distinguished practitioners with concurrent professional careers. In most cases, they also have successful teaching experience. Our adjuncts teach courses such as Transnational Negotiations, Applications of Econometrics, International Corporate Finance, Options & Derivatives, and Corporate Governance. Compensation is competitive with salaries for similar positions in other leading universities.

IBS is a pioneering professional school dedicated to teaching and research in global finance, management and economic policy. We respond to the growing need for international vision and expertise by preparing exceptional individuals from around the world to become principled leaders of global companies and public institutions. We teach theory, immerse students in international experiences, and connect them to best practice in business and policy. This learning experience transforms the way our graduates view the world, and helps them develop skills and insights to chart its future.

The graduate school enrolls 500 students from over 70 countries in MBA, MA, MSF and Ph.D. programs. The School offers an intimate, rigorous academic environment with a focus on global markets and institutions, and maintains active exchange programs with leading business schools worldwide. For further information, visit www.brandeis.edu/global.

In our undergraduate Business program, we teach a way of thinking that cuts across disciplines and is rooted in practice. We offer undergraduates an array of business courses covering all the primary business disciplines, supported by a large number of liberal arts courses.
