ACT RAISING SAFE KIDS PROGRAM
A Childhood Safety and Violence Prevention Initiative of the American Psychological Association

ABOUT THE PROGRAM
The ACT Raising Safe Kids Program is a national research-informed parenting program taught by childcare professionals who teach parents to create safe, healthy environments that protect children from violence before it begins.

WHAT PROFESSIONALS LEARN
- The risk factors for violence and its consequences in children’s lives
- Practical methods of discipline to use with children.
- Protective factors and skills for effective parenting, such as anger management, peaceful conflict resolution, positive discipline, and screen/media violence education
- Participation in community-wide prevention efforts with a support network of professionals
- The training also qualifies for Professional Development Points (PDPs).

WHO SHOULD ATTEND
The ACT-NE Regional Training Center trains and certifies professionals who work with families of young children, many of whom come from backgrounds in early education, psychology, domestic violence counseling, social work, healthcare, and community economic opportunity agencies. These trained professionals return to their organizations, and lead the parent education program in their own community with the support and technical assistance of the ACT Northeast Office.
