John Jefferson Davis
3:30 – 4:50 pm
Lown 302

Davis, since 1975 Professor of Systematic Theology at Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary, a leading evangelical seminary, will address identity, belief, and diversity within the largest sector of Protestant Christianity in America, and will attempt to clarify common misunderstandings. He will share his own faith journey and personal reflections on current internal discussions about race, gender, and politics since the recent presidential election.

WHO ARE THE “EVANGELICALS” IN AMERICA
What Do They Believe, and How Are They Misunderstood?
Unity and Diversity within Conservative Protestant Christianity

Professor Davis chairs the Division of Christian Thought at Gordon-Conwell. His books include Foundations of Evangelical Theology, Meditation and Communion with God, Worship and the Reality of God, and Frontiers of Science and Faith: From the Big Bang to the End of the Universe. He currently researches the intersections between Christian theology and world religions, and Christian faith and modern science.
