This talk examines how Euro-Catholic thinkers sought to justify the extirpation of Indigenous religious traditions in colonial North America. In doing so, the Catholic Church’s relationship with empire will be sketched out as we try to understand how and why modern Catholicism seems to be still invested in “saving” Indigenous peoples from their own traditions.