An interdepartmental program

Comparative Literature

Objectives

The Comparative Literature Program engages the study of literatures and cultures within and across national boundaries. It comprises the comparative analysis of literary texts not only in relation to genres, forms, and movements but within the larger context of social discourse and cultural practices. Because cultural practices are not static but continually changing, comparative literature is sensitive not only to historical context, but also to how cultural forms adapt to new conditions. Analysis of cultural differences, diversities, and similarities will promote a greater knowledge of the rapidly changing globe we inhabit, and also deepen students' critical understanding of their own cultures.

Requirements for the Minor

The minor in comparative literature requires five courses, distributed as follows:

A. COML 100a (Comparing Literatures: Theory & Practice) to be taken as early as possible in the student’s academic career.

B. Two upper-level literature courses (normally 100 or above) each taught in a language other than English.

C. Two comparative literature courses offered or cross-listed by Comparative Literature Program.

No more than two classes taken toward the minor can double count toward any other major or minor.

No course with a grade below a C– will count toward the minor; nor will a course taken pass/fail.

How to Become a Major or Minor

All students are welcome to enroll in any course in the program unless prerequisites are stipulated. Students interested in learning more about the comparative literature major or minor are encouraged to speak with the undergraduate advising head for comparative literature. Keep in mind that three literature courses must be taken in a language other than English. Students are strongly encouraged to spend at least one semester abroad, preferably in a country whose primary language is not English.

Requirements for the Major

The major in comparative literature requires a minimum of nine courses, distributed as follows:

A. COML 100a (Comparing Literatures: Theory & Practice), to be taken as early as possible in the student’s academic career.

B. Three upper-level literature courses taught in a language other than English. Normally they are numbered 100 and above, exclusive of language skills courses. The three courses may be drawn from more than one language tradition.

C. Four upper-level courses in COML or any of the courses offered by other departments or programs that are cross-listed below. These courses will bridge more than one national literature or literary tradition and engage in cross-cultural examination.

D. One additional literature course. This course need not be comparative.

No course with a grade below a C– will count toward the major; nor will a course taken pass/fail.

No more than three courses may count toward any other major, and no more than two courses in film studies may be counted toward the comparative literature major.

The program encourages students to incorporate a historical focus into their comparative literature curriculum, and to consider beginning or continuing the study of a second foreign literature in the original.

Honors

Students who wish to pursue honors must enroll in COML 99d, normally in the senior year, and complete a thesis. One semester of thesis research may substitute for an an upper-level comparative course. A senior project is required only of students pursuing honors.
