Apply to Brandeis

The Brandeis admissions process is designed to find exceptional individuals who will enhance and enrich our global community of scholars. We seek students who are intellectually curious, interested in broadening their horizons and committed to social justice. The Admissions Committee reviews each application holistically, assessing a student’s potential contributions to Brandeis. This includes a review of secondary school transcripts, national exams, English language testing, personal essays and extracurricular involvement. Many applicants have an intended area of study. However, students apply to the general undergraduate program at Brandeis and can explore different disciplines before declaring a major.
