

Evan Schultheis

Evan Schultheis is a graduate student at Winthrop University pursuing a Master's of Arts in History, with a thesis on reconstructing Byzantine military equipment. He has published one book entitled The Battle of the Catalaunian Fields, AD 451, multiple articles for Ancient Warfare, and is also a degreed and published chemist with expertise in graphene supercapacitors. His fields of expertise include Roman military studies, Roman military archaeology, and their related fields in Roman culture, social history, political history, and economic history, with focuses on Late Antiquity and the Middle Byzantine periods. As an avid military historian, he is also a reenactor of most periods of Roman history, focusing on the public history and living history approaches to education and experimental archaeology. He is also a historical fencer and historical archer. His interest in metal music revolves primarily around Metalcore, Deathcore, and Electronicore, but he is always partial to the classics.