

Gregory Darwin

Gregory Darwin is a Senior Lecturer in the Department of English at Uppsala University and head of the Celtic Section, where he teaches courses on Irish and Celtic literature, history, and culture, as well as medieval and modern Irish language. He earned his PhD from Harvard University in 2019, after completing a dissertation examining the Seal Woman legend, as well as other traditions regarding the figure of the mermaid or selkie in the folklore of Ireland, Scotland, and the Nordic countries. He has previously held positions as language instructor at Université de Bretagne Occidentale, Brest and as a postdoctoral researcher at Aarhus University. His primary research interests include Irish and Scottish folklore, legend, and popular belief, and late medieval and modern Irish literature, and the interaction between folklore and literature, and he has published a number of articles and chapters on these topics.