Dr. Leire Olabarria holds a DPhil in Egyptology from the University of Oxford (UK), and is currently Lecturer in Egyptology at the University of Birmingham (UK). Her primary research focus is kinship and group formation in the Middle Kingdom, which she studies from an anthropological perspective. She is the author of several articles in peer-reviewed journals, as well as a monograph entitled Kinship and Family in Ancient Egypt: Archaeology and Anthropology in Dialogue, published by Cambridge University Press in 2020. Other topics she works on include gender, memory, the social construction of monumental spaces, and the reception of ancient Egypt in heavy metal and in science fiction. She is also a keen field archaeologist and has been working at the site of Dayr el-Barsha in Middle Egypt since 2012. Leire has been headbanging since her teenage years, when she was a regular at metal gigs in her native Bilbao, Spain.
