

Esther Kartiganer '59 Prize for Excellence in Journalism and Women's, Gender, and Sexuality Studies

This prize honors the distinguished career of Esther Kartiganer '59 (1938-2012), a pioneer in broadcast journalism who became a senior executive producer at CBS News and produced award-winning segments of "60 Minutes" over the course of a long career. Esther was also a founding member and long-time co-chair of the Women's, Gender, and Sexuality Studies Program National Board. Established in 2007 by the WGS faculty in gratitude for Esther's service to Brandeis, the Kartiganer Prize honors an undergraduate for involvement in social activism around feminism or sexuality, on or off campus.

Guidelines

- All undergraduate Brandeis University students are eligible to apply.
- Written articles, video and audio broadcasts, and research papers or theses are all eligible for this award. Students may submit either a single work or a dossier of shorter pieces. Materials produced for a university course and those produced for publication are equally acceptable.
- The prize committee will look for serious engagement with questions of gender, strong and thorough research, and excellence of presentation.
